

THE ONLY THING IN THE CLASS THAT GOES TO SLEEP. THE BATTERY.

Our feedback told us that students were interacting more, not just with the Activboard, but also with their teacher and with each other.

But some teachers wanted interaction with the children at their desks - as well as up at the board. Or to be able to control the board from anywhere in the room. Enter the Activslate.

Effectively it's a wire-free, fully integrated A5 'mini board', small enough and portable to sit on a desk. Either moved around the class or one per pupil.

It operates with the same mouse pen as the Activboard. (Same precision. No new equipment to learn.)

It 'talks' wirelessly to the Activboard.

And - just in case any budding would-be teachers feel inclined to take over the class from their desk - each slate can be activated and de-activated by the teacher from the main Activboard.

We're hearing that children are more engaged than ever. But, as always, it's the down-to-earth details that count as much as the high ideals.

So it's very light and very tough.

And has batteries that typically last months - economically switching to sleep mode if not used for several minutezzzzzz.
